Home Comfort Problems Can Be Solved

During the heat of summer, many homes in this area experience comfort problems. Many time, an area of the home will be several degrees warmer than the rest of the house. Some rooms may feel stuffy, drafty, or too humid. In extreme cases, the entire house never gets comfortable on hot, humid days. Many homeowners have learned to live with these inconveniences, thinking there is not an affordable solution out there. But in most cases, home comfort problems can be solved affordably. Air Conditioning Efficiency Standards Increased

Effective January 1, 2015, the Department of Energy (DOE) efficiency standards for air conditioning units took effect. This means that new systems installed will be more energy efficient. What does this mean for the consumer? It means in order to make an educated decision on installing or replacing HVAC equipment, you have to understand how air conditioning system efficiencies are measured and rated so you get the best value for your investment. Read More...
